Editorial Review

From Publishers Weekly

Starred Review. As infectious as a baby's first smile, this celebratory book will enchant any family with a newborn to love. While ostensibly exploring a baby's anatomy, Adler's sunny poem and Nakata's ebullient watercolors demonstrate not only a baby's exploratory joy but also the palpable delight a baby brings to a family. The satisfyingly predictable pattern of verse lends itself to interactive hugs and tickles. A closeup illustration of the roly-poly baby (Baby's got eyes,/ bright little eyes) is followed by a page divided into four illustrations (Round as pies eyes./ Just the right size eyes./ Like an owl—wise eyes./ Peek-a-peeka-boo). The question Who loves baby's eyes? (later asked about nose, ears, tummy, etc.) is answered at the turn of the page (Me, I do.) as Nakata shows the baby interacting with different family members. A final verse and spread featuring the whole clan—parents, grandparents, brother and even the dog—provides an adulatory conclusion. Although the book is recommended for those under age two, it is especially suitable as a new-baby present for any member of a warmhearted family. Up to age 2. (June)

From School Library Journal

PreS—Through bouncy verses, children follow a toddler's antics as her grandparents, parents, a brother, and a pet dog celebrate everything about her, from her eyes to her tummy to her toes. Baby's got ears,/cute little ears./Smaller than bunny ears./Stick out kinda funny ears./Hearing everyoney ears./Baby's got two./Who loves baby's ears?/Me! I do! Cheery watercolor and gouache artwork breaks the spreads into full-, double-, and quarter-page images. Despite the use of baby in the title, toddlers are the more appropriate audience for the book's pastel color palette and playful details. This is a lively lap-reading experience for the very young and their grown-ups, likely inspiring a dose of tickling in the process.—Rachel G. Payne, Brooklyn Public Library, NY
