Elsewhere/Where Else (Turnabout) By Russ Wood

One book, two stories, each connected to one another, giving the reader the choice of where to begin: Joshua is a genetically-modified human, created to survive a 490-light-year voyage to another habitable planet after Earth is destroyed by a meteorite. He stumbles upon a genocidal plot among the elites of the ship, and somehow must find a way to survive using only his savant-like intellect. Marai accompanies her mother on sabbatical to live among a lost tribe, when they encounter another murderous tribe who can see despite sewing their eyes closed. She learns of an ancient prophecy concerning her, and must use her power of belief to survive the impending doom. How are the two stories connected? You might not know until you finish both!

Editorial Review

Review

I really like Elsewhere! I love the symbolism, I love the pictures I see when I read. I love the idea that the veil is that thin and a collision of the spirit world and our world would allow for us to see and fly and have spiritual ability while in the body. I could read more about these two....and would like to do so soon. Whenever I have enjoyed a book or movie and later it pops into my head, I know it is a good one. --Steven Douglas

I loved the spiritual aspect of Elsewhere and think this book has the potential of really helping someone who has lost a loved one. I love that! --Shira Jorgenson
