But a Short Time to Live By James Hadley Chase

James Hadley Chase is probably the best known synonym of René Lodge Brabazon Raymond, an English writer also known by other pen names, including James L. Docherty, Raymond Marshall, R. Raymond, and Ambrose Grant. He is one of the best known thriller writers of all time. He was influenced by American crime writers and writers of hardboiled pulp fiction, but he rarely visited the United States and the books are based on knowledge acquired by reading and using reference materials. He has written some 90 books, almost half of which have been made into movies.

In "But a Short Time to Live," Chase returns to the theme of man's fatal attraction for beautiful but dangerous women. Harry Ricks is a street-side photographer. Clair Nolan is a gorgeous but unscrupulous pickpocket with the longest legs in the world. When Harry snaps a photo of Clair one evening, he ends up beaten in an alley, the film torn from his camera. And when Clair becomes his fiancée, Harry is in deep trouble with too many questions unanswered. Clair has a sordid past, including a murder charge hanging over her head, but Harry can't let her go.

In Chase's punchy, fast style the story comes to an ending that cracks like a whip.
