Editorial Review

About the Author

With Bachelor and Doctorate degrees in Chemical Engineering, Alan Wilson began his career in asset maintenance at Guinness, where he was responsible for managing the maintenance and project activities of over 200 in-house and contract trades people. He went on to manage the design, procurement, and building of new installations in Nigeria and the Cameroons. Wilson also worked as chief engineer for a large independent consulting firm, where he established and headed the maintenance management accounts with the Royal Navy, Kodak, British Nuclear Fuels, and British Petroleum and British Airways. Subsequently, he consulted for over 40 companies, including Ford, Shell, Amerada Hess, Anheuser Busch, Conoco, and Chevron and then launched his own consulting business, carrying out both project management and maintenance assignments. He has directed the design and construction of major new operations in Colombia and Hong Kong and assisted in the start-up of companies in the UK. Additionally he actively consults in auditing and benchmarking, strategy development, and the application of e-collaborative systems in asset maintenance. As a well-respected professional, Wilson is an advisor to many asset maintenance conferences and is a presenter at numerous seminars.
