Starred Review She was just big-boned, big-nose Sarah living in Brenton, Ohio, where, as she puts it, "committing suicide would be redundant." Then she meets Demi, who is trying hard to be invisible--surprisingly easy considering he's black and gay. Alone they are, well . . . alone, but brought together by their love of musical theater, they light up. All this might sound like a stereotypical take on gay men and the women who love them, and there is some of that, but there's also so much more. The renamed Sayde and Demi make their way to a summer theater camp, and that's where things change. Encouraged to become part of the ensemble, Sayde finds she is too opinionated to do that, even as it turns out that she is less talented than she believed. At the same time, Demi is discovering that he's a star who can hang out with actual boyfriends rather than Sayde. Lockhart mixes this all up neatly. Most of the story is told in a bright, bitchy voice that, while familiar, is very smart and very funny; transcripts of tapes made for "posterity" add delicious detail. Although it's hard to say what kids who aren't into musical comedy will make of the myriad detail offered here (Birdie! Cabaret! Cats!), theater lovers will applaud, and everyone else will appreciate the twists and the ending you don't see coming. Ilene Cooper

Sayde and Demi are theater-crazy best friends who are each other's only solace in their drab Ohio town. They successfully audition for a prestigious summer drama camp and are ecstatic to be heading to New York. As summer progresses, there's high drama indeed as the two friends reach the limits of their talent, go on first dates, come out of the closet, and grow up. Kate Reinders, a musical theater actress, knows of what she narrates. She trills, teases, sings, laughs, and projects all the drama these kids experience. The story is lively, heartbreaking, and fun--just as you would expect a teenage theater camp to be. G.A.D. © AudioFile 2009, Portland, Maine
